The authors of this handbill are no better than the methods they pursue, and are a menace to the well being of the community. Their acts are sufficiently self-degrading, and it is not my desire to add thereto by mentioning their names. My life has mentioning their names. My life has been practically all lived in Lincoln county and my private and public record is an open book to all, and in my candidacy for the office of county judge I solicit your support in the name of clean politics and good government.

speech of Gov. Aldrich at Falls City. The board of county commissioners have a grip on the purse string of every resident of the county. 4 They are imposed by law with the duty of levying our taxes as well as having entire charge of spending the money, In this county our board is composed of three commissioners, one of whom is elected each year. Two of the present board are democrats and one is a republican. The term of the republican member, Mr. Walter, expires this year and should a democrat be elected in his place at the coming election, the county board will be solidly democratic. Experience has shown in handling county, state and national matters, at least two political parties are necessary, one as a check on the other. What would congress accomplish, for us if all the members were of one spolitical party? To Whom it May Concern:

It will give me pleasure to state that the work of R. L. Cochran as assistant in this department, in the field work of surveying, while at this institution was very satisfactory and in my judgment the experience he has had since, added to his work here should make him a competent county surveyor. I will state myself I should have no hesitancy in employing him, and from what I know of his work, I think the voters of his county for over twenty years and has a county would be making no mistake

Their Problem

My niece. Molly Brice, is a great admirer of the introspective school of fiction. She is also ambitious to scribble. Young aspirants for fame in the literary field usually begin by attempting to copy the author they consider the nearest to perfection. The other day Molly brought me a story and asked me to read and criticise it. saw at once that she had been trying to duplicate the two famous authors who inaugurated and head the introspective school. She called it "Their Problem." I agreed to read a chapter or two while she waited.

A girl sat before an open fire embroidering. A dainty slippered toe peeped from the edge of her gown. She looked at the clock that marked the hour of seventeen minutes to 9. She was expecting a young man to visit her.

"Will he propose tonight," she asked herself, "or will he spend several more months dallying? And am I ready to give him a definite answer? What does my heart say? Vainly 1 have asked the question. Is he in doubt as to his own heart, or are there practical reasons for this delay? Is he a delayer or a trifler?"

She dropped her work in her lap. supported her temple with her fair. round hand and peered into the fire.

She had asked herself seven questions and had no answer for any one of them. Having an analytical mind, she set herself to the task of unraveling the problem of which they were a part, beginning with one that concerned her own inner consciousness. "Know thyself," said the Greek philosopher. "If I do not know my own mind, how can I expect John to know his? Let me first determine that on which all the rest depends. Do I love him?

"What is love? Poets have sung it, artists have painted it, but who has told us what it is."

Here at the outset Gwendolen was balked in her queries. How could she determine whether or no she loved John when she did not know what love is? "Either I must define love." she mused, "or I shall not be ready with his answer when he comes."

She took up a box of bonbons he had sent her that afternoon, and, inclosing one of them between her forefinger and thumb-the nails were pared in pointed style-she put it between her coral lips, biting it with her white teeth. Then she sat herself to the task of defining love.

"Suppose," she said, "I make a few hypotheses as to the nature of love. Thus perhaps I may be able to select the one that nearest fits my own

He pays her compliments. She comes to consider him very nice. Suddenly he ceases his attentions and bestows them on another girl. The first is furious. "Is this a case of true love?

"A girl goes to a matince. The hero of the drama thrills her. She goes again and again, never contented unless looking upon his noble features, listening to the godlike sentiments he expresses in his deep melodious voice. "He is pointed out to her on the

EDUCATION AND THE TEETH

School Authorities Now Recognize the Important Part Played by Oral Hyglene.

School authorities are greatly interested in various plans for improvement in the minds of backward pupils by improving the condition of their bodies. Now they have become imbued with the idea that clean mouths mean healthy pupils, and the examination of the teeth of school children is the latest thing under consideration.

Investigation in Germany shows that nearly 96 per cent of the school children have diseased teeth and sta tistics show conclusively that:

1. On account of bad teeth the physical development of the child is seriously retarded.

2. The more the physical develop-ment is disturbed, the less in general is the mental capacity of the child. 3. The worse the teeth, the worse as a rule, is the school standing.

About 500 pupils in the schools of Ludlow, Mass., were recently examined and the condition of the teeth and mouth found most deplorable. The most striking feature observed was the neglect of dental cleanliness and absence of any evidence of dental treatment beyond a few instances which teeth had been extracted. Probably not more than three out of one hundred possessed brushes, and showed signs of using them regularly, and these three were practically free from decay/ Bacterial deposits, tartar, remains of food and every degree of malodorousness and poisoning were evident.

Many children were suffering from undue retention of temporary teeth, but still more from the premature loss of them, showing the utter neglect by the parents of the first set of teeth, which from a dentist's standpoint is most important.

The first permanent molar was invariably badly decayed. Probably 50 per cent. would have to be treated or extracted. This molar is very confusing to parents and children, as it comes before the temporary teeth are shed and is therefore taken for one of the first set, and neglected from ignorance.

It is evident from this inspection that something must be done. First of all, the public must be convinced that such a movement is for the public welfare.

The disastrous results from a lack of knowledge on the subject of orai hygiene are seen on every hand. Suffering humanity needs more thought upon the subject and needs it badly, because our future health and happi ness to a great extent depend upon it How can we best accomplish a dental education among the masses of the people? Dentists cannot get at the masses of children growing up around us to teach them, and the par ents as a rule are entirely ignorant on the subject. It would seem that this must be looked up in our public schools. We are supposed to have medical inspection in the schools which is all good as far as it goes. but it is not broad enough. It does not take in the teeth, at least the examiner commonly ignores that part of it; yet any physician knows the great importance that mastication plays in the promotion of good health. We should have dental inspection in every school.

(Copyright, Western Newspaper Union, REAL DENTISTRY IS MODERN

Most of the Improvements Have Been Brought About Within the Last Century.

In some of the ruins of Egypt are engravings representing a man lying on his back, while another is standing over him pounding out a tooth with a rock. This is primitive dentistry, and while it might seem to be severe, yet, no doubt, it brought a measure of relief, otherwise such extreme measures would not have been resort ed to.

In China, it is said, when a mar goes to the native dentist for relied from the toothache, it is the usual procedure for the dentist to insert his finger in the patient's mouth, and, on removing it, show him a worm which he says he has withdrawn from the tooth, and which was causing the ache. This procedure, so we are told, usually stops the ache.

These primitive methods are a far cry from the scientific attitude of the profession today, yet most of the improvement has been brought about in the last 100 years,

The causes of this rapid development have been many, the rapid growth of knowledge in other lines. of work, the formation of dental colleges, the invention and manufacture of useful instruments, and the scientific study of the mouth and its dis-

There is one other thing which has brought about this marvelous growth, which is perhaps more important than all the other causes combined. and that is the professional spirit, or dental ethics, as it is sometimes called

It used to be the thing, if a dentist made an improvement, to hide it from his brother dentist so that he might reap the benefit alone. Many a secret, or invention, has died with the dentist originating it. In time this custom was changed, and then the profession began to progress by leaps and bounds. Nowadays, if a dentist discovers anything new that is good, he carries it to his society and explains it to every one, so that all may get the benefit. He goes to the convention with one new idea and brings back a hundred, and both he and the public are benefited. (Copyright, Western Newspaper Union.)
